

Generalizations on Economics

A fair, powerful, economic agreement is the most realistic basis for World peace.

A sound agreement between America, Britain, China, and Russia, if kept with the strictest integrity of each nation must be advantageous to all nations concerned, to both the capitalist nations and communistic ones.

An economic pact with Russia and the other allied nations must be more advantageous to all parties concerned if carried out with the strictest integrity.

An economic pact between communism and capitalism, in other words, between Russia and her allies, Great Britain, America, and China, must be advantageous to all parties concerned if carried out with the strictest integrity.

Manufacturing must be individual with governmental control of the profits [xxx] their plan.

Every concept of free speech is of no importance to culture or public welfare which industrialist has control of it through their large disbursement of advertisements in the daily newspapers. And since the expansion and centralization of modern industry, a motivation has developed in propaganda of a most cynical and infamous attitude towards the public and an utter disregard for the people and the nation, patterned after the oratory of Goebbels's hype which states that one can promulgate a lie until it becomes a truth and in which it shows utter contempt for humanity. It's utter disregard for humanity is sinister and it has ignited the whole of the US A and will very shortly destroy it.

To have an ideal economic system, a nation should, first of all, cleanse itself spiritually and should engender love into the soul of man.

There should be a spiritual examination of all bank presidents, their special qualifications approved and passed on by a spiritual competence board.
