

Whitman

American characters were extremely simple. The American Tramp was a banal stiff who road under trains ect., and the stage character was clearly defined. An Italian, if low class, was an outsider, an immigrant, a road worker. An Englishman was a silly fop or a haggard limey. A Frenchman was either a [xxx] or a lover and so on and so on.